Transcript of Pre-Recorded World Satsanga by Guy Steven Needler:

"Welcome to this World Satsanga held on the 27th of November 2021 in conjunction with Kevin Moore and The Moore Show. And again I encourage you to visit Kevin's YouTube Channel where you can see all the additional documentaries he's doing based upon investigating all the different channelers and the different qualities worldwide. There's probably been another couple videos put on there since the last Satsanga, so please go and have a look. It's quite interesting to see the different qualities and the different types of channeling and the different directions that these channelers go into. Very, very informative.

And Kevin's going to be helping me with the video versions of these Satsangas that will start in January 2022, so look out for them being reintroduced onto his own YouTube channel as well as mine. Okay, because that's where they'll go on the YouTube Channel, although I'll still send out emails to those people who are following or have followed for the last ten years. And also I'll do a blog on my website, but they will all still be on YouTube after that rather than on the website, although the transcriptions, of course, will always be available on the website.

Okay, so let's have a look at today's agenda, and the first bit is a talk on "How to survive the confusion and conflicting spiritual/metaphysical information?" And then we're going to do some questions, which basically are a carryover from last month. We had a lot last month and we've got enough also I think for December, because what I want to do in January is have it more live, so people can ask questions for the 40 minutes or so that the Satsanga is live from the Zoom messenger that is there, rather than send them in as an email beforehand. So it will open up the questions to everybody rather than just those people who communicate with me via email for the Satsangas.

Then we'll do a meditation to remove any forms of abuse completely from the human consciousness, including a heart and brain coherence meditation. Now these are requested meditations. I mean really, the first part of the meditation to remove any forms of abuse from the human consciousness are really an extension of combining the brain and heart functions of the incarnate human vehicle — the heart being our emotional and empathic function and a connection with our True Energetic Selves and Source via clairsentience, whereas brain is basically ego. So we can start to look at the use of the ego for certain functions while we're here, but when we need to make decisions or we need to seek guidance on how we can move forwards in certain ways, then we should be using our clairsentience or our heart or our intuition. Okay, so we can work those two together, because they link in quite nicely.

Part 1. Lecture on "How to survive the confusion of the conflicting spiritual/metaphysical information?"

Now there's lots and lots and lots and lots of information out there — different levels of detail, different levels of correctness, different levels of understanding, different levels of quality, different levels of depth — and they all come from different angles, different people observing things in different ways, depending upon their own particular specialism and how they interpret what they experience or see or believe or actually know. And that interpretation is based upon their life experience being used as a translation function. So it's not just what you hear, it's what you see and feel and know that you've experienced throughout this particular incarnation. And what sometimes comes in through previous incarnations that have been used as a skill set that help us navigate through this particular incarnation as well to help us gain additional skills and the subsequent evolutionary progression with it.

So you can see that there's a lot, ranging from almost kindergarten stuff — you know, dealing with dolphins and angels and unicorns, etc., etc., and the elementals — right up to the sort of hard core metaphysics — understanding convoluted systems, realities, event spaces, and the almost physics behind metaphysics. Those are the sort of hard core side of it, as I see it, that it's the more purer side. But there's obviously stuff that we can handle as individuals or we can't handle as individuals. So what do I mean by "handle?"

Well, in effect we can only understand what we can understand. That's an obvious statement. But when you think of it in terms of, you know, we only understand what we understand based upon our educational level, and the direction that that educational level went in, then you can start to understand that that's what it means. So those who are educated as engineers will understand things from an engineering perspective. Those who are educated as scientists will understand things from a science-based perspective. Those who are educated as mathematicians will understand things from a mathematics-based perspective. Those who are educated as artists, for example, will understand things from an artistic-based perspective. Those who are educated for medical science or in forms of caring or service will understand it from those ways.

So it's important that we look at this and understand that our level of understanding is based upon our total incarnate programming, so to speak, and the subsequent educational processes and likes, personal likes that go with it. So when we think that certain things are conflicting, most of the time it's not so much a conflict, it's more a different understanding of the same thing. So based upon what you read or see or discuss or basically get involved with, you need to work with that which is basically understandable by you. And that doesn't mean that you should take onboard everything that sounds right, it means you should always critique it, critique the source of the information, such as myself as an author, critique the direction that the information is coming from, critique the level of detail behind it, and therefore, the potential purity associated with it as well.

So really you've got to, as individuals, not just read it and take it as being, that's right — you have to read it and feel that it's right, or maybe it's not right for you at that time. You know, there's lots of people who read, for example, my books who read the first couple of pages and then put them down. They've ended up being a door stop or a dust gatherer in their personal library. And then three or four years later, they've picked them up and then devoured them. The thing there is that you understand that in the period of time between when they first picked up the book, read the first page, decided it wasn't for them and put it away, they've probably experienced a number of different things that have allowed them to grow. And that growth within them has allowed them to be able to understand the different level of understanding in the information that's coming and the direction within which that information is coming from. Hence, picking up the book later and devouring it.

So just because something doesn't feel like it's for you right now or at all, it doesn't mean that it's not going to be for you in the future, so to speak. So just think of it in terms of what can you understand now and what feels right for you? And that means is it too advanced for you? Or too unadvanced for you? Look at it from the perspective of where you are as an individual, what you feel is correct, what you can work with, and how some stuff might stretch you a little bit, and allow you to move forwards in a progressive way.

So it's not a case of confusion, it's a case of understanding where we are in our own progression, our own metaphysical progression, our own spiritual progression, if you want to call it that, and working with it. It's no good giving somebody matrix multiplication, if they haven't started to work out their times table. You know, there has to be a level of understanding and certain levels of mathematics in between, just understanding your times table to go into matrix multiplication or division or even sort of taller mathematics later on.

So you start to see that the understanding of the individual is based upon the growth of their knowledge base and the direction in which they feel that their knowledge base could go and what is interesting to them. So that which may be interesting to one person, such as understanding how to communicate with elementals or nature spirits, if you want to call them that, and work with nature in very sort of, shall we say, progressive and beneficial way to both nature, the Earth and humankind and the individual itself to something, such as understanding the reality behind quantum physics and what's really going on.

So depending upon who we are, and how we think, behave and act, and how we've been programmed over the years from our first integration with our vehicle, our incarnate human vehicle, to where we are now, and where we're going to be later depends upon where we sort of slot into the information that's there. So don't worry about what ends up being confusing, or what ends up being potentially conflicting, just take what you feel is right for you now and work with that.

Now when I was writing "The History of God," I noticed later in the "Beyond the Source" books, that I was, shall we say, allowed to go in a slight level of inaccuracy, certainly with understanding the structure of the multiverse, because I was having difficulty understanding the rest. But the thing was Source and Hum and Byron, the other entities I was communicating with allowed me to go slightly in error, because I was still moving forwards. That error would iron itself out later. So don't worry, if you got it slightly wrong and if you then find out that oh, my understanding was wrong in this and it's now right here, that's fine.

See the thing is it doesn't matter whether you make a completely vertical increase in knowledge or it's in a slight angle. The thing is you are moving forwards and you're moving in a progressively expanding way to allow you to become more expansive, more understanding, and more competent in your ability to understand and sort through what's being presented to you. So again, don't worry about what's confusing, it might not be confusing in a few years time — it might be ten years, it might be twenty years. It could be tomorrow.

Okay, and don't worry about whether it conflicts, just understand that there are different ways of understanding the same thing. And sometimes different authors or different spiritual and metaphysical leaders understanding things in different ways. Look for the links between different individuals, different spiritual metaphysical leaders or authors or YouTube presenters. Look at what is the link between them all and you'll start to see they're all talking about the same thing, but at a slightly different angle, a slightly different level of understanding and a slightly different way of understanding it themselves.

If you think about it, for years and years and years ago, when you — for those of us who are over the 60 mark — when we were at school, if you didn't understand what the teacher was telling you, it's very rare that a teacher would come and help you out, because they only had once teaching method. If you didn't understand how to assimilate the knowledge with that teaching method, you got left behind basically, whereas these days, it's more comprehensive. Teachers are taught to understand that certain pupils aren't understanding a particular teaching method, and their learning methods are different. So then they're given the opportunity to teach that student in a different way or find out what their learning modality is. When they understand what the learning modality of that student is, then the student can start to flourish.

I myself found this out when I went to college...when I left school and went to college, that a certain teacher there was able to teach me. He taught the whole class, of course, he didn't just teach me. But the way he was presenting the information resonated with me and I understood it. And therefore, I started to progress in a level of understanding understandable knowledge based on evolution, rather than just I'll give this information, it means nothing to me, because I can't understand it, because I was taught wrong or the modality of learning wasn't understood by the teacher in the first place.

So you have to look at these different things and say, Oh, okay, this particular teacher is good for me, because it or he or she thinks in the way and presents information in the way that I can understand it. So sometimes look at the teacher that's there and then if another teacher is presenting you — it might be different levels of detail or depth or knowledge — but you can understand it, then go with that teacher. Go with that guru. Go with that shifu. Go with that sensei. Because at the end of the day, it's no good wallowing around in confusion, if you haven't been able to pick the right guru, the right teacher.

It's important that you pick the right teacher for your level of understanding and that the detail that you go to look, observe and learn from is something that you can work with. So you have to be choosy. You have to be picky basically on deciding what modality of teaching you prefer to have, which teacher slot into that, and which particular level of detail you are happy with as a basis for you to become expansive later. Okay, so that's how to survive the confusion of the conflicting spiritual information. There is no conflict, it's just that there's lots and lots of different ways to understand the same thing.

Okay, and specifically, because the subject of metaphysical information is so wide, you know, and there are different ways of understanding it, it does need a number of different ways to understand it. And sometimes an individual flourishes even more, if they understand not just one way of understanding something, but maybe a different or two or three different angles of understanding it, and that creates a holistic level of knowledge rather than just a single directional line or way of understanding knowledge. Okay, good, so I hope that's helped a bit in how to understand the confusion or so-called conflicting spiritual/metaphysical information.

Okay, so let's look at these questions we've got left over from October, and then we can move on to hopefully the meditation, because I've got some questions that have come through as well, which I'm going to use in December. Okay, I'm going to focus on those, maybe we might get some more later, but I'm going to focus on those as being the ones we're going to move forwards with for December, so we can clear the decks and have more, shall we say, fluid or not so much fluid, but a larger question base from lots of different people, if and when they communicate and join into the Satsanga via the Zoom sessions. Okay, alright, the first one is from MO. Don't forget some of these are continuations from the previous questions. We didn't finish the MO question and we didn't start the FN questions, so here we go. So from MO, this is the lovely lady who is translating the books into Japanese in Japan and she really is one individual, who is in full connection with nature spirits and those elementals that look after the Earth — really is connected to them. Fantastic.

Part 2. Questions and Answers

1. How often and in what sort of situation TES [True Energetic Self/Higher Self/Oversoul] is willing to sacrifice one of its Aspect/part of its sentience? (MO)

I guess the question is whether it would give it up. And within Source Entity One (SE1), a True Energetic Self wouldn't give up part of its own sentience. Its sentience would always come back into some sort of communion. Although if you look at "Beyond the Source" — and I can't remember which book or even which Source Entity — there is one particular situation where some of the aspects do move away from their TES and find another TES or create an independent volume of sentience with the other aspect they move away from, they create a TES to create a larger TES, which is a completely new TES.

So they don't sacrifice anything, they always maintain their sentience in SE1. But in one of the other SE's (again I apologize, I can't remember which book it is, but it's definitely one of the "Beyond the Source" books. There was one of the Source Entities has their particular TES and the aspects of that TES do move away from, if they find themselves evolving faster than the overall, shall we say, bulk evolutionary level of the TES that they're part of. They can move away and join another TES or commune with other, shall we say, detached aspects and create a completely new TES once they reach a certain level or volume of sentience. Okay.

• Are Aspects and Shards from same TES naturally attracted to each other? I am wondering if they naturally "fall in love" when they meet in the physical.

It's not so much aspect and shards from the same TES are naturally attracted to each other, we're also attracted to sympathetic souls — those souls who we've worked with before. And falling in love, falling in humanly in love is not specifically a thing that they might do. We would potentially recognize them significantly. We'd feel like we've been with them before. We feel like we've communicated with them in different lives. We'll feel like we've known them all of our life. We would probably enter into an instantaneous friendship. And we'd certainly feel like we've met them before.

(20 min) So those are the sort of things that we would have, because actually these different things... a shard from an aspect, or a number of shards from an aspect are in effect the same sentience as the aspect. The aspects from a TES, if they're separate individualized aspects or projected aspects into different parts of the physical universe, they're still aspects, they're still sentience from that TES. So in essence, they're always in communion of some sort, it's just that that level of communion is limited whilst they are projected into the lower frequencies of the physical universe. So they're naturally fall in love, because they're already in love, if you want to call it that.

But it's more likely that the aspect or shard that is from the same TES would recognize each other again in a similar way, because they are soul mates basically, because a soul mate is an aspect, which is from the same Godhead or TES, so we'd recognize them instantaneously and with a supreme level of, shall we say, empathic connectivity. But they wouldn't naturally fall in love as such, but they would be very, very connected to each other is a better way of saying it.

• If I remember correctly, in the past, you mentioned that it is very hard to break contracts, because so many entities are involved.

That's right, they're all downstream functions in which all entities are linked together.

- But I am thinking that some contracts are naturally broken as a result of some unexpected events occurring or not occurring or priorities of certain events exceeds others. What are the criteria for breaking contracts?

Well, the contract is basically something that we've agreed to do with another aspect or soul to allow us and that other soul and other souls to basically evolve. We participate in certain functions, certain interactions in certain environments in certain points in our existence, in the incarnate existence, to be able to expand our evolutionary content. So these desires are met with equal desires by the other incarnate entities who also want to benefit. And those are downstream functions.

So the only way, that a potential contract could be so-called cancelled or broken, is if two different aspects that were supposed to connect with each other to experience something experience it in a different way, or experience it concurrently but with other entities involved. So they experience it, but they don't or haven't experienced it together. Now maybe that isn't enough to break the contract — probably the whole point is that they do experience it together.

But at the end of the day, if it's seen by the TES that that particular aspect has experienced what it wants to experience, it just hasn't experienced it with the aspect that was part of a contract, for instance, and that other aspect has also experienced what they were going to experience with the first aspect, but they've experienced it with another aspect, then the need for them to be together, irrespective of how long that will be, is no longer necessary. So in that respect, that would be the only criteria I could see where a contract is broken.

It's a bit like, if you wanted to go swimming with somebody, but you'd end up being asked to go swimming by somebody else two or three days earlier, and you still wanted to go swimming with the other person, which is two or three days later, maybe the function of experiencing swimming with the first person gives you the same experiential content as you may have experienced with the second person two or three days later. And if that's the case, then you may feel that you don't need to go swimming with the second person two or three days later, because you've experienced what you wanted to experience. So it's a bit like that.

It's almost like, Oh, I didn't expect to experience this now, therefore, I don't need to do it, so we can change the diary. But there's a lot of downstream functions associated this, so it's not a case of I've experienced it with soul X, I don't need to experience it with soul Y later on, because sometimes experiencing it with soul Y also includes souls A, B and C as well, and they'll all be part of it, so breaking contracts is very rare, because of the downstream functions associated with the interaction between aspects or souls in certain environments and the other entities that are all part of it, that are very close to us or part of the background as well. Okay.

- How do healing energies and intention of healing effect people's illnesses and injuries when experiencing these things are part of their life plan?

If an entity, incarnate entity is experiencing illness or disease, and they're supposed to experience it, because it's part of their life plan, and they're given healing, then the healing will be there to help them move on. Not necessarily move on in terms of being healed and eradicated of the illness or the virus or the disease, it may be that it helps them move to the next juncture, where they can potentially leave the incarnation. So a healer not only heals an incarnate soul or aspect, but they also provide the energy required to allow that soul or aspect to depart in a seamless and painless and quick way.

So it's not a case of, you know, because you've been healed, you'll be healed. It may be that a particular soul wants to experience the total experience of getting cancer, for example, going through chemotherapy, going through radiotherapy, going through all the emotional content associated with it all, having all of the interactions with their partners and their family and their friends in the same way, and then depart when the body can no longer cope with all the physical dysfunction associated with the cancer. The healing will be there to give them a sense of calmness and not just resignation, but acceptance, so that they can move back into the energetic in a faster, more robust way.

Because when we start to resist that which we've got, then we start to slow down our ability to depart from the gross physical, and moreover, we start to associate ourselves or attach ourselves to the Earth and the low frequencies associated with this particular universe in a more robust way, so it's more difficult for us then to reacquaint with our True Energetic Self. Okay, and the last question from MO.

• Are Captive OM happy for being captive or are they wishing to become Non-captive OM?

Well, let me ask the question. I'm being told that the captive OM are happy with their status, and their status is created as a function of their quality of sentience that's apportioned to them, and the quality of sentience with the OM is that they have a percentage of pure Origin sentience. Okay, so this is all part of the book I'm writing right now, called "The OM: The Uncreated Creations." But in essence, they're quite happy with what they are. At some point, when the Source finishes its evolutionary cycle, and starts to move into a different location within the Origin, then they will be basically given the same capability again potentially. And when all of the evolutionary cycles of all these Source Entities and even the Origin has resulted in all of the structure of the Origin in this first group of twelve structures, then they will potentially be non-captive. So they understand this, because they can see the bigger picture. So they see that what they're doing is benefiting, and that's the way forwards.

Let's have a look at the next question then, so from FN. There's a couple of nested questions here, so the first one is...

2. The Egyptian pharaoh, Akhenaten, and Moses, is there a relationship or connection between the two?? (FN)

The thing with Egypt is that they started to label even nature spirits with levels of deity, so they had lots of gods. And Akhenaten was the first pharaoh to recognize that there's just one God, one Source. So from the perspective of that, is there a connection between Moses and Akhenaten? Not in terms of their work together, they didn't have any work together, because they were in a completely different, shall we say, event stream, event space.

But in effect, they're both purporting to present and broadcast the same thing — that being that there's not lots of different gods, there's only one God, one Source — and that's from our perspective, of course, because we're all part of that Source. And that that one Source is what we're derived from, what we're individualized from. And basically, Akhenaten wanted to portray that. The only thing is that most of the Egyptians didn't want to hear that.

And then Moses basically was that particular incarnate soul that was able to provide a level of, shall we say, laws that allowed us to interact with each other in a pretty karma-free way actually

The Commandments were there to create a way of understanding, a way of working together in a way in which we didn't get karmic debts between us. So basically, although from my understanding they didn't work together, although you might find that certain texts might suggest that, they weren't even in the same time zone from my understanding, they would have given information that shows a link between the two in terms of their understanding of what they're trying to broadcast albeit different levels of knowledge from different directions. Okay, because they were both speaking about the truth, rather than trying to perpetuate a system, which is just there to control the population.

The next question has three parts to it.

- The Arc of the Covenant, what was the reason for its construct and the purpose behind it? Was the Moses' tablets carried in that Arc of the Covenant?

The Arc of the Covenant, I'm just going to do a quick meditation to understand. I'm being told, no, the tablets of stone that the Ten Commandments were written on weren't in the Arc of the Covenant, because they were passed on verbally, fairly accurately, even through all the years from the Old Testament, so to speak, to the current day. So there's no need to do this. The Arc of the Covenant was basically, shall we say, a storage box for higher knowledge to be broadcast later. So this works with the second part of this question.

- Was the gold layer inside, specifications and construct meant to create a highly dangerous electromagnetic to fend off others from accessing Moses' tablets for safekeeping?

Well, if the tablets weren't in there, it wasn't for that. Basically, it was designed to hold technology that needed to be shielded from radiation or electromagnetic radiation. So rather than fend off others, it's to protect what was inside, because it was sensitive. So gold and copper and lead are very good insulators from EMF and also magnetic radiation, and so if you've got things that are sort of magnetic media, and they're exposed to electromagnetic radiation, that media could be wiped clean. So the Arc of the Covenant, having had a lined interior, was lined to protect the technology that was hidden in there.

Okay, and I'm told that some of that technology is Atlantean and needed to be protected from other radiation — the level of radiation wasn't described to people, because they couldn't understand it, but basically it was just there to help protect it and keep the coherence of the modality, which that information and technology was being stored.

- The same shape, size and format of the Arc of the Covenant is discovered in the ancient Egyptian tombs, why is that?

Basically, because it was a big enough size to create a time capsule to be able to store various copies of similar or same technologies with similar or same levels of detail or information within it. So it's a bit like a memory stick now, if you think of it in that way. Memory sticks have various sizes and shapes, but the basic design is the same. It's got a connector, which connects into a computer. And they are by and large now, they're still USB2 connectors even though they work on USB3. And computers also have a similar size and shape. So a computer, you know, it's got, if it's a laptop, it's got a display, a body or a case, which holds all the electronics and the memory circuit, and the internal processors, and an external interface, which is the keyboard with the keys.

So you can understand that a box that's going to protect something from being irradiated or wiped clean would have to be the same, and maybe the same size to make sure that the copies of the same thing were being protected. So it's basically a common storage medium, one that is good at protecting the contents from electromagnetic and magnetic radiation and also from standard radiation from things like some of the metal ores that are in the ground that we currently have as well — things like lithium, things like cobalt, all these different things. They all have different radiation levels and they all can also affect a high technology or technologies that are sensitive to these sorts of radiation and could affect their function.

• Which Alien nation seeded Egyptian nation? What are physical characteristics of this Alien nation?

My understanding is that the Egyptian nation was born from the ruins of the Atlantis. There was a period where there was no human interaction with the planet, and then there was a civilization that was created from nothing by those entities that are working with the Earth, i.e. those disincarnate aspects from different True Energetic Selves, who are here to manage the possibility of experiencing individualized free will. So most of what I'm seeing or have seen is they are basically part of the Atlantean race.

I know that there was some thought processes that, for instance, Akhenaten is an example that we previously talked about, had a body type that looked almost female and a long headed skull. And people thought, Oh, that was an alien type of humanoid body. But we know that with some African tribes where they, and even with Japan a couple of hundred years ago, they can bind the head and bind the feet, so when the person grows, they grow into a certain direction. So some of these things were basically a function of showing regalness or in terms of with the Japanese with the feet, and even sometimes I think with the Chinese, was to make them more petite, so to speak, and make the ladies look taller as well.

So really, some of these things aren't anything to do with an alien race. They're basically to do with the carryover function from the Atlantean period and also a desire to create some form of differential between those who are leading vs. those who are following.

Okay, next set of questions here now. I've got another one here, again from FN.

3. How long has Origin expanded itself and acquired intelligence by us humans going through our trial and error? (FN)

Very little. If you think about the Origin being what it is, we are not even on the...even our TES doesn't even figure in terms of the atomic scale in comparison to where we are now. So we provide a function, which is taken into consideration and absorbed by Source, and therefore, by Origin in terms of its overall evolutionary progression, its overall experiential interaction with self. So our interaction, although we like to think we are making a big deal, actually we're quite insignificant, but we are making a difference.

The difference really is that we are providing an opportunity to show smaller individualized units of sentience can work in an autonomous way with individualized free will. And how that affects themselves and affects others around them, including the environment. This is why it's such an important, certainly from our Source Entity's perspective, an important experiment, because it's giving the Source via us and our True Energetic Selves, and therefore, Origin the opportunity to observe what happens when we give a small volume of sentience the opportunity to just be his own master, his own god. And right now it's an interesting, but not massive level of import or help towards the overall level of evolutionary progression that Origin is having.

It's not to say it's not important. Every interaction by every TES and every aspect and every shard is important across all of the different Source Entities. But in essence, we're insignificant, but we are making a difference. So that difference is very, very small, but it's still a difference.

- Does the Origin or Source have compassion or are they capable of having the depth, breadth and intensity of compassion that humans do?

Have humans got compassion? Well, that's an interesting statement, isn't it? Again I refer to this thing — how do we, as human beings, understand whether our cells or the atoms that make our cells or the electrons and the protons and neutrons that make the atoms, or the leptons, the quarks and stranges and charms, that make up the next level of structure, feel? Do we know how it feels? No, we don't understand how our atoms work. We don't understand what their interactions are or any components or subcomponents of the atomic structure of what we are, let alone our cells.

So the answer is they will have a level of understanding based upon their level of sentience and the position of sentience in terms of its own evolutionary level and, of course, its volume. So whereas we pay very little attention or zero attention to our atomic structure in our body and our individual cells, we do I suppose subconsciously respect what they do for us. They maintain the vehicle that we are incarnated into to experience, learn and evolve in these low frequency environments.

So if you were to consider that we have compassion for those cells for doing this work, when we abuse the body, then you could argue that yes, there is a level of compassion from the Source and the Origin for us as individualized units of Source diving into the absolute minute detail of the structure of the Source to be able to understand it for it. So I hope that answered the question, it's a bit sort of convoluted. It's a very interesting question, but probably a very human question rather than one that is going to give an answer in a human way. I think the answer is more about respect and love rather than compassion. Okay, that's probably the best way to say it.

- With respect of humanity's goal to ascend, why is Source not seating more peaceful, kind and compassionate leaders in the world?

Source left us to do what we wanted to do with our individualized free will. So we put these leaders in place, not Source. It's up to us to change the leaders, not Source. So again part of this understanding of giving us individualized free will is that we do have individualized and collective free will. And we can't blame another higher entity for not sorting the problems out. We've created the problems, we've got to sort the problems. And that's how we ascend.

We ascend by recognizing our errors, and how we could move forward and how we should move forwards, and then always making the right decision. And choosing the right quality of leadership worldwide or in our locale is one of the things that will lead us to ascension, when we start to recognize that there has to be a certain level of quality of individual and those working in and around and with them who are capable of creating a robust level of leadership on behalf of us. Okay, a good question, but yeah, it's up to us. That's why we're here.

If it wasn't up to us, we wouldn't be here. Let's put it that way. If the Source decided that there wasn't any benefit from us doing what we're doing and making the mistakes that we're making and learning from those mistakes, then we wouldn't be individualized at this moment. Okay, so that's one way to think of it.

- Why is there more deterioration on earth at its low frequency in the 21st Century despite all the technological advancement?

Why? It can be summed up in one word — greed. Okay, we want to have everything and want it now. And part of the individualized free will aspect compared to what we've got is that we've got a choice to make. We can have whatever you want, provided we're prepared to pay the consequences, or we can be of service. And the vast majority of individuals on the planet have chosen to be greedy and complacent as well at the same time. You know, they want to have, for example, bars of chocolate, but they don't want to dispose of those chocolate wrappers sensibly and responsibly. So they dispose of them out the car window, for example, or they take it out of their pocket and drop it on the floor rather than put them in a bin.

So the deterioration is based upon us not really behaving well. But on top of that, also there's a larger percentage of backfill people as well, who are those souls who are in between the incarnate human soul and the animal soul, and they're experiencing individualized free will for the first time. So it's a bit like a child in a candy shop — and they just go mad and they experience everything. But most of those experiences are very, very selfish. So that's another reason why the frequencies pulled down, because of the very high percentages of backfill people as well.

And if you go back to, and I can't remember the Satsangas, but one of the Satsangas about a year ago, if you go to the website and go into the page and List of Lectures and Meditations or Satsangas, you'll see that in there's a link to the Lecture associated with this. And you'll be able to see that one of the questions was what was the percentage of...[backfill people].

It might even be in Big Pictures (www.bigpicturequestions.com), because the lovely lady who does the transcriptions (US) does the Big Picture Questions website as well, and has written a few of her own books as well. So please visit her website and download her books, because they're all very useful and they're a good synthesis as well of some of the work that I've been able to or have been honored to be able to channel. And in there you'll find out the percentage of backfill people on the Earth, which is significant right now. Significant.

- How does our ascension and awareness benefit the Source when its expansion depends on our high entropy actions and behaviors? Doesn't its perpetual fast expansion depend on that which keeps us in the lower frequencies, not ascending (because of unresolved traumas, increasing numbers of backfill people, high entropy behaviors and actions that lower the overall frequency)?

That means "lossy" — we lose sort of the benefit, so to speak. It does, but you have to realize that the human civilization as a method of incarnation, as our particular vehicle of incarnation that we're experiencing right now is a very small one. There are billions of different incarnate civilizations throughout the physical universe and its frequencies. So if you think about the number of different galaxies that are there in the physical universe in the third frequency, that which we can see, and then you times it by the number of galaxies that are in the fourth frequency, the fifth frequency, sixth frequency, seventh frequency, etc., to the twelfth frequency, and then you sort of think and say, Let's be very, very, very conservative and say there's only one civilization per galaxy. You've still got billions times the power of twelve.

So human interaction is a very small, very small thing. But it is quite special, because we've got this individualized free will. So in terms of Source depending upon us, we're just one of very, very, very, very, very small component in the overall mechanism that's allowing the Source to expand and increase its own evolutionary content. Okay, so the ascension from our perspective will happen. But we need to govern ourselves properly first. Okay, individually and collectively. And of course, there are lots of other civilizations out there that lots of other souls are incarnating into to experience, learn and evolve. And they've all got a part to play in the overall contributions as well. So if you think about our contribution being very, very small, like not even a drop in the ocean, and you divide the ocean, all the oceans in the world by a drop, you'll realize basically how many civilizations are out there helping the Source to evolve.

Okay, well, thank you for all those questions. Absolutely superb, some very deep searching ones. And I'm just going to finish off now with the meditation.

Part 3. Meditation

And I'm just going to finish off now with the meditation to remove any forms of abuse completely from our human consciousness, including a heart and brain coherence meditation.

(52 min) Please download the high quality MP3 File to do the guided meditation with Guy Steven Needler via his website or blog (meditation starts around 52 min).

(1:07 hr) Closing comments: Thank you very much for listening to this Satsanga. Thank you for participating in your questions and listening to the questions and the lecture at the start and the meditation at the end. And looking forward to presenting the last audio version of the Satsanga in December 2021. Namaste to you all and do have a wonderful end of November." END

NOTE: I have prepared a Searchable pdf document with ALL World Satsanga Lectures, Questions and Answers collated from 2016-2021 to make it easier for us to see what questions have already been asked in previous Satsangas and what answers were given at the time. This will allow us to ask NEW questions or ask similar questions from a different angle after reviewing what we already know. This document is over 1000 pages, so don't try to print it out.

You can go to Needler's website (www.beyondthesource.org) to find the document at this URL:
